This article examines several current risk assessment and early warning models to predict genocide and mass atrocities. Risk assessment (RA) concerns a country’s long-term structural conditions (regime type, state-led discrimination, etc.) that determine overall risk for atrocities. Early warning (EW) focuses on short/midterm dynamics that can serve as triggers.

"Predicting Genocide and Mass Atrocities" by Ernesto Verdeja

Bottom line: Washington's foreign policy in the Middle East has been based on wishful thinking, divorced from an analytical approach to civil war.By meddling in the region, American leaders have inadvertently incentivized mass killing and other forms of civilian atrocities. It's a myth that the U.S. didn't intervene in Syria, where U.S. mistakes likely worsened the suffering.
