A theologian of the cross says what a thing is. In modern parlance: a theologian of the cross calls a spade a spade. One who "looks on all things through suffering and the cross" is constrained to speak the truth. The theology of the cross, that is to say, provides the theological courage and the conceptual framework to hold the language in place.

A theologian is described as someone who studies diverse denominations from many cultures, are biblically and theologically responsible, professionally competent, intellectually astute, and spiritually mature. A theologian strives to raise his or her mind to the contemplation of God and one who seeks to understand what He believes.

Theologian Careers | The Princeton Review

“Theology is not free speech but holy speech” (John Webster).

The theologian is a servant of the word: in multi-logue with other theologians, she thinks about what God has told us in the Bible. Thus - but only thus - is she also a servant of the church, creatura verbi Divini.

Herman Philipse makes very fine tombstones. Recently he published a book, God in the Age of Science?, criticizing much modern philosophical theology (e.g., purportedly rational arguments for being Christian) in far greater depth than atheist gadflies like Dawkins and Dennett have ever felt necessary. This particular tombstone is for Martin Heidegger: a very critical

THEOLOGIAN | meaning in the Cambridge English Dictionary

By Paul Helm The idea of 'Perfect Being Theology' gets short shrift from modern Reformed Christian theologians, even from some who should know better. The phrase is associated with St. Anselm, and with his ontological argument for God's existence, which some have regarded as a stroke of genius. Here I...
