The Lower River by Paul Theroux: review - Telegraph

The Lower River isn't so much a novel of Africa as it is a study of old age and of human connection. Malabo is merely the site that magnifies all that is wrong in Hock's life: his failure in a nutshell (much as it is also a stark microcosm of civilization itself, simply a more elemental, stripped-down-to-basics (and hence laid bare) version of what can be found in, say, Medford).
